

DO WE ALWAYS GIVE THINGS THE IMPORTANCE THEY DESERVE?

We are all so caught up in the most ephemeral things that we easily forget the important ones. We are so connected to material things that we forget we should live to share values with the rest of the world.

We get distracted to the point that we would donate billions to resurrect a burning cathedral from the ashes, but we would not be willing to give a piece of bread to those who suffer from hunger every single day.

We love our creations but hate people around us.

We say that we fight for a better future sitting on our throne of selfishness and indifference.

We are called human beings, but do we deserve this name?

I was silent while people were crying for Paris.

I was silent out of respect for a piece of history torn by flames.

But every day I am in mourning for children, mothers and fathers torn by flames, in the other side of the world, for whom no one will ever cry.

Many times I have been asked if I could see a happier future for this world and the answer has always been yes.

Together we can work for a better future. Just let us start by giving things the importance they deserve. Hunger, children and future.

Raymond Igbinoke